What Is Worldbuilding?

One Idea. One Meaningful Connection.

What happens after your first interesting idea?

Gemini Notebook

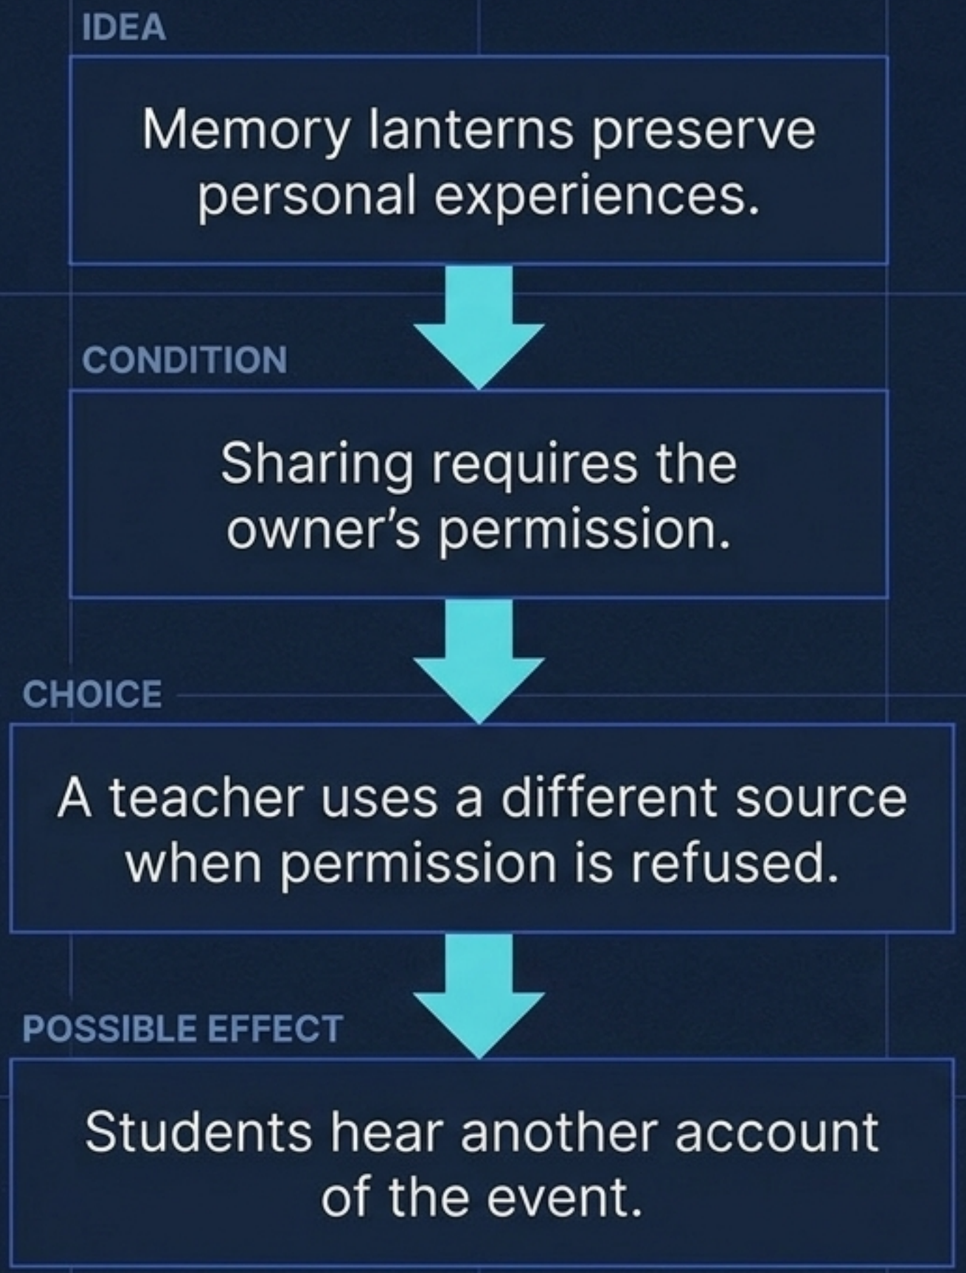

Start with One Imaginative Idea

Imagine a city where memories are stored inside glowing lanterns.

An imaginative idea is a valid starting point.

Worldbuilding Explained

Worldbuilding is the creative process of developing an imagined world's conditions, places, inhabitants, relationships, and possible consequences.

A world does not need to be enormous to be meaningful.

Gemini Notebook

WHERE?

Where does the idea happen?

WHAT CHANGES?

What consequence might follow?

UNDER WHAT CONDITIONS?

What rules or limitations apply?

WHO IS AFFECTED?

Who has a decision to make?

Optional exploration questions — not compulsory steps.

Lumenhaven: A Human Choice

Lumenhaven has magical memory-storing lanterns. A teacher wants a recording for the classroom.

Its owner refuses permission.

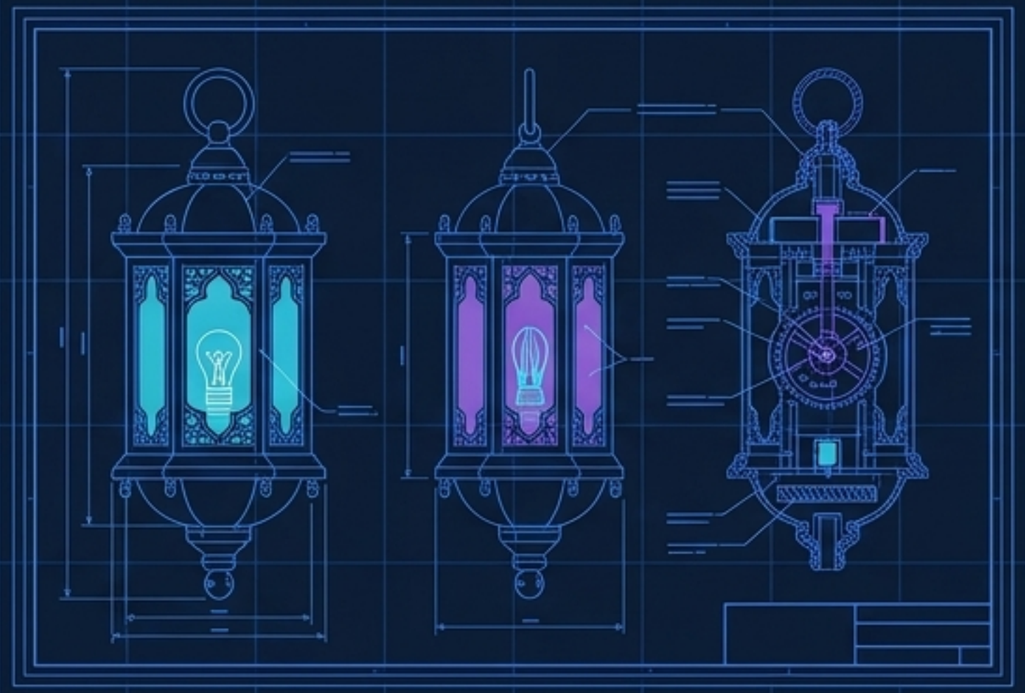

The teacher chooses another source.

Noncanonical fictional teaching example — not Asthortera.

Gemini Notebook

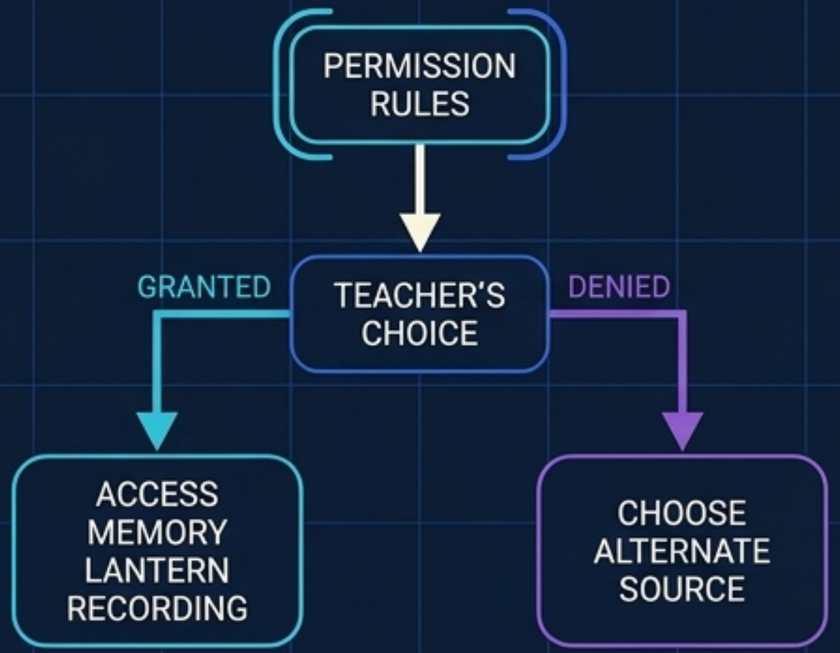

ISOLATED FACT

The city has memory lanterns.

CONNECTED EXPLANATION

Permission rules change the teacher’s available choices.

Both are creative material. Connections reveal what changes.

Gemini Notebook

A mental model helps organize questions; it does not guarantee one outcome.

Gemini Notebook

One Rule Does Not Guarantee One Outcome

Imagine the same classroom consent rule. If permission is refused, the teacher might:

- Choose another source.
- Change the activity.
- Postpone that part of the lesson.

Additional information and human decisions matter.

Diagnostic Framework

FICTIONAL WORLD	GENERAL MENTAL MODEL	EVERYDAY CONTEXT

A teacher needs permission before using a stored memory.	A task may depend on a prerequisite.	A group may need a teammate's draft before rehearsal.

DIAGNOSTIC ANALYSIS

- WHAT MAPS: Prerequisites can influence the next action.
- WHAT DOES NOT MAP: Magical memory technology and fictional rules.
- WHAT MUST BE VERIFIED: Actual deadlines, responsibilities, and alternatives.

Transfer the reasoning question, not the invented facts.

My First Worldbuilding Observation

1. My imagined idea.

Dream-responsive streetlights

2. One condition or rule.

Nightmares make the lights dim

3. A person making a choice.

A shopkeeper opens later

4. One possible effect, because...

Morning shopping patterns may change

The example shows one plausible fictional outcome.

Gemini Notebook

ONE IMAGINED IDEA.
ONE MEANINGFUL CONNECTION.

Worldbuilding helps us explore what conditions change, why choices follow, and which consequences might matter.

CONDITION → CHOICE → POSSIBLE EFFECT
